An Arithmetical Problem

A CHANCE FOR THOSE WHO WISH TO MAKE THEIR BOOKS BALANCE

If you have a spare hour the Portland Advertiser suggests that you consider a problem in simple multiplication, for the performance of which a Maine newspaper not long ago offered a prize of $50. Take the number 12. Multiply it by itself and you have 144. Now multiply 144 by itself. Then multiply that product by itself and so on until 12 products to have been multiplied by themselves in turn. This apparently involves more labor than would appear at first sight. Some of those who have been considering the problem and the chances of obtaining the reward, they finally submitted it to the Josiah H. Drummond will known as the Cumberland bar who has made reputation as a mathematician to settle it and SAT

After some time Mr. Drummond reported that the said product called for contained 38 figures (the first of which is 1) Although the figures to express the answer would be over 1070 feet long to perform the operation would require about five hundred millions of figures. If this can be made at the rate of 100 a minute, 10 hours working 10 hours a day for 100 days in each year would be 36 years about. It is multiplying it should make a new calculation, as he does with other figures, the number of figures used would be one less 37,999,128. That would be the proper number of figures used, if the product of the left hand figure in the sixth pile and by each figure of the multiplier was always a single figure; but as it is most frequently and yet not always two figures the method employed to obtain the foregoing result cannot be actually applied. Assuming that the figure 10 used on an average once in 10 times 37,000,000 of figures or a point three approximation to the actual number

Where the Day Begins

According to the way in which the arrangement is now carried out the first land that the new day dawns upon is East Island about 220 miles west of the coast of Chili. That is to say, the 4th of July has its here within a few hours of the 1st having broken on the American coast to the east and the two days run on alongside—the 4th in Easter Island and places west and the 1st in all places on the American continent. But to have them the start of the world is not to be suggested advantage to these islanders. Suppose one of them sails east to America, what is the result. He will find that they keep the day there under a different date, and he will have to reckon one day to a calendar twice over to put himself right with their notions. On the other hand, if to American crosses from east to west this wonderful magic line where the day begins he will find the dates in this fresh part of the world are one in advance of him, and he must needs strike a day out of his calendar to keep up with the times. This fact was curiously illustrated in the case of Magellan, the Portuguese captain, who sailed around the world from east to west in 1521 and having crossed the magic line of days a little in his wanderings, his calendar became, of course, a day in arrear. The sailors were completely ignorant of this and finding, on landing at home, that their sum day was falling on a Monday they accused one another of tampering with the reckoning. It was not for some time that the true and simple explanation of the wonderful loss of time was discovered.

A Fatal Electric Wire Accident

The circumstances attending the death of James McGinnis at Memphis, Tennessee recently, were little short of horrible. He and two other young men left their boarding house with the intention of going to the depot to bid good bye to some friends, who were about to leave town. As the two reached a narrow plank walk leading to the railroad yard, one of them named Brennan, tripped over some obstacle and fell heavily to the ground. Before either Arndt (McGinnis other companion) or McGinnis could aid Brennan, the former was also thrown to the ground, whereupon Arndt noticed a wire lying along the ground, which had tripped his companions. As McGinnis did not seem able to arise, Arndt extended both hands to him, which the prostrate man seized and Arndt quickly arrested an electric shock. The latter tried to break the contact, but the current caused his efforts to be of no avail. In a few seconds McGinnis' grasp relaxed, and Arndt rose again to the ground. By this time, Brennan had staggered to his feet, and both he and Arndt, who had also recovered his footing, rushed over to the aid of their prostrate companion, but the latter was dead. The only mark on his person was a black spot on the back of his neck, where the wire had literally crisped the flesh. The coroner's jury found in accordance with the above statement, which was drawn through the engineer and criminal carelessness of said company. Such indignation was aroused by this lamentable affair, and the officers of the company have been placed under bonds for trial.

THE SIN OF OMISSION

It isn't the thing you do, dear,
It is the thing you leave undone
Which gives you a bit of heartache
At the setting of the sun.
The letter you did not write,
The flower you might have sent, dear,
Are your hands my ghosts to-night.

The word you might have kissed
Out of the brother's way,
The bit of heartsome counsel
You were hurried too much to say
The prying touch of the hand dear
The good to and strangers from
That you had no time or thought for
With treasures enough of your own

These little acts of the hours,
So easily out of mind
These chances to be angels
To bless one to the end
Are the things that come back sweetly
Or bring the bitter heartbreaks
At the setting of the sun
—Mrs. Julia R. Lougster in London Graphic.

Problem for Yankees.

It is a singular circumstance that there is only one exception to the rule that candidates for president whose names end in N are elected. Tilden is the only exception. There have been a surprising number of presidents with the N on the termination of their names. Washington, Adams, Madison, Jackson, Van Buren, Harrison, Buchanan, Lincoln and Harrison. The Republicans had a double chance because both of their candidates' names end with N, while the Democrats conducted for the presidency. Thurman could not cover us, each having odds. The presidents elected without an N as the termination of their names were not pitted against the unconquerable N. The president-elect according to superstitious traditions was lucky to have only one given name. This recalls the fact that fifteen of our presidents and Harrison will make the sixteenth have had only one given name.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

That Faded It

Some of the greatest orators the world ever produced have shone in a brightest when some incident or impertinent question threw them out. The eloquent and erratic John Randall of Kentucky was once delivering an address in Buffalo, N. Y. As usual he began in a low tone of voice. Some one in the rear of the hall yelled: "Louder!" Under several times Randall stood the interruption, some time then advancing to the front of the platform he raised his impressive voice to a tone that everybody could hear and said: "When the last great day comes and the angel Gabriel blows his trumpet to wake the quick and the dead, then a trumpet more dread than those Buffalo will yell louder louder." That ended further interruption.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Beauty of American Women's Feet.

Are brave women have made Paris their second home for so long that there is little left to say about their manner here. They are as fearless with dressmaker and cabman as they were in their birth feet. The French shoemakers say that they strive down the feet of even the Spanish women to fit the beautiful American foot. A well-shod foot looks better on a boot than on a shoe, and it must be one's foot standing up on a light slipper and not "light head a pair" foot pulled down in drunken. To do Americans justice they do not have to squeeze their feet to make them look small and frequently strive to give them room to go to England for their walking shoes and to learn to walk more.—Paris Guide de la Mode.

Wore Dress But Little Else

The Apache Indian official snubbers in society cloth under a hopsack, the Japanese wears a tall hat under his tulip tree, the farmer of Illinois cuts his wheat in a rusty surtout the Italian peasant prospers in a cheap ulster the English statesman snores under a black chimney pot they are all as ill clad and go thoroughly uncomfortable as man can be. Who will teach them the supreme truth that the man alone is well dressed who is dressed in keeping with his station and his occupation and that while male dress is as senseless as ugly and useless as it at present is it is absurd to prate of the taste or to boast of the wisdom of civilization?—Ouida.

The Spartans and Music.

The favorite problem of thinkers and teachers since thought began, has been to find some engine of education which should reach the character as effectually as the ordinary means of training touch the understanding and in the opinion of many not men alone but nations. The engine which taught the Spartans, which distinguishes the brave man from the coward. "A man's music is the source of his courage." It was their music which enabled Leonidas and his three hundred to conquer at Thermopylæ. It was music which taught the Spartan youths how to die in the wrestling ring or on the field of battle. These claims are audacious surely. Yet, when we consider how the rhythmical tread of the brave man differs from the agitated shamble of the coward, how innate is the art of human joy, and how joy and repose of mind are the main elements of manly fortitude we shall at any rate admit that there is a strong affinity somewhere our only difficulty will be to acknowledge that music, deliberately applied, could ever be the direct cause of these reputed results. To achieve the end desired Spartan boys passed their youth in learning dance, hymns and songs this was their sole material culture. They were taught to dance and keep step to the measure of the songs as they sang them. And, grown to manhood, now perfect warriors, marched into battle with quickening fleet, crowned with flowers calm, joyful and serene, and intoning their songs, moved steadily thus into the thickest of the fight, undisturbed and irresistible. The kind that leads our armies to the field of battle nowadays is a scant survival of Spartan practice, yet even in the music of prayer there are many elements of excitement to courage.—The National Review.

A Week Virginia Dinner.

The many celebrated founders of the section are Ben Eastman, Jule Baker, a woman, and Lem Chalkley. There is no postmaster, but this is not otherwise important. Jule Baker is the wife of Jesse Baker, and lives near the mouth of Black Water fork. She can handle a Winchester with the dexterity and precision of Col. Prentiss Ingraham, the dime novelist. Lem Chalkley is a tall, lank, lantern jawed mountaineer, who is never happy except when he is hunting, fishing, or trapping. He is a dead shot with a rifle, and is thoroughly conversant with all the habits of the wild animals of the mountains. He is a bachelor, and does his own cooking. Last week he had a dinner party, to which he invited Jule Baker and her husband. The menu was a simple one, consisting of a roast of bear meat, a dish of venison, and a mess of wild turkey. A few months ago, for a dinner party, Lem would have had a dozen dishes, but now he has only three, and they are more delicious and satisfying. He has a standing invitation from Jesse Baker to dine with him whenever he comes to Jule's house.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

AN ANGRY ELEPHANT.

A STORY TOLD BY JAMES INGLIS IN "TENT LIFE IN TIGER LAND"

Breaking a Vicious Shell on His Knee Hurled Into a River with Slow Fuse in Hand—Rushing Into the Jungle—Loose Ideas of Suffocation

Tent Life in Tiger Land by the Hon. James Inglis, is the best book of hunting adventure we have seen for many a long day. Imagine Allan Quatermain in real life and you have Mr. Inglis. His stamp of what his good friends acknowledged on the jungles of an Indian frontier district could in graphic power and exciting adventure anything that Mr. Rider Haggard has imagined. Mr. Inglis gives a subtle speaker but has pages will amply be secured by boys and revel with eager interest by children of a larger growth. The story of the hunter impaled on the horns of a buffalo bull and carried about for days until the rot ting flesh dropped support enters from the bull is horrible to one of the most gruesome horrors ever printed in the English language.

Here is a sample of one of Mr. Inglis' stirring sketches, the escape of one of the author's friends from the attack of a mad elephant.

RAN THE salute—the Lieber has gone mast or mad. He has broken loose.

We all started to our feet. George had just gone down to the bank of the river to where the cooking was going on which lay nearer the mad elephants picket. By the time the river stretches servants were flying in all directions. The large brute with infinite cunning had all along kept a cautious, unlikely eye to wrench up the stake to which he was bound. This at last he succeeded in doing. With the first desperate bound or lurch forward the heavy solid chains, frayed and worn as one link, had snapped asunder and with the last stake trailing behind him he charged down on the camp with a shrill trumpet ing scream of maddened excitement and savage fury. The men with the spears waited not for the onset.

THE TERRIBLE AT WORK

One poor fellow, bending over his pot of rice trying to blow the smouldering embers of his fire into a flame was passed by the long flexible trunk of the infuriated brute, and had just time to utter the terrible death scream, which kind words we are has heard a thousand like an echo, ere on the powerful knee of the maddened monster. He next made a rush at the horses, that existed an affrighted smell by the clamor around them into straining at their ropes and tore them from, leaving the grievous family of one poor Colonel a horse, that had struggled it was to get free.

All this was the work of a minute. Poor George who was bridegroom of seven days, whereon was answering to the clarion of his own conscience was the source of the saddest, direst aspect of affairs to the huge tawny mass. Both of the elephant was almost over him. Another moment, and he would have shared the fate of the hapless mahout had he not with admirable presence of mind let go the hunting hat grip with his dexterity and precise of full on the angry mouth of the furious brute. It went down, however, not that of the dog through the air as he let it with one swing of his right trunk he pulled him on his corpse, and he threw in the middle of the stream with a scrape still tightly clutched in its hand.

Over the river we could see the infernal brute who had thus suffered as in a perfect frenzy of rage, knocking on the shapeless heap of cloth, furniture poles and ropes and digging his tusks with savage fury into the hangings and canvas in the abandonment of mad uncontrollable rage. We had little doubt but that poor Mac lay crushed to death smothered beneath the weight of the ponderous animal or mangled out of all likeness to humanity by the terrible tusks that we could see flashing in the clear moonlight. It seemed an age, this agony of suspense. We held our breaths and dared not look into each other's face. Everything showed as clear as if it had been day. At last the elephant among the strong canvas canopy about as a dog would worry a door mat. Thrust after thrust was made by the tusks into the folds of cloth. Raising his huge trunk, the brute would scream in the frenzy of his wrath, and at last after what seemed an age to us but which in reality was but a few minutes, he staggered to the foot and rushed into the jungle.

IN A VERY TIGHT PLACE

Just then a smothered groan struck like the peal of joy bells on our anxious ears and a muffled voice from beneath the folds of the shamiana in Mac's well known tones greeted out "Look alive, you fellows, and get me out of this or I'll be smothered!"

In trying to get out of the way of the first rush of the elephant his foot had caught in one of the tent ropes, and the whole falling canopy had then come bodily upon him, hurling the camp table and a few camp chairs over him. Under these he had risen, able to breathe, but not daring to stir, while the three beast had behaved as has been described. His escape had been miraculous. The cloth had several times been pressed so close over his face as nearly to stifle him. The brute in one of its savage, purposeless thrusts had pierced the ground between his arms and his ribs, pinning his clothes so dressing gown deep into the earth, and he said he felt himself sinking into unconsciousness, what with tension of nerve and brain and semi-suffocation together, when the brute had happily got up and rushed off.

"How did you feel?" I asked.

"Well, I can hardly tell you."

"It must have grazed your ribs."

"It did. After that I seemed to turn quite unconcerned. All sorts of funny ideas came trooping across my brain. I couldn't for the life of me help feeling cautiously about for my pipe, which had dropped somewhere near when I tripped on the rope. I seemed, too, to have a quick review of all the actions I had ever done, and was just dropping off into a dreamy unconsciousness, after pulling a desperate race against Oxford with my old crew, when your voices roused me to sensation once more."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Spare to Go Again.

A fact in relation to the death of Washington, not generally known, may be stated. The day after his death the clock at the Masonic lodge in Alexandria, of which he was a member, was set at the hour and minute of his decease. There the clock was stopped, and it has never been disturbed since. Nor have the hands been moved since.—Washington Star.

FROM BATH

A Snow Storm of Great Severity.

Bath, Dec. 18. The Dec. calendar term of the Supreme Judicial Court of Sagadahoc county opened this morning, Judge Walton presiding. The docket the largest for the present term will probably be short, no important cases being tried.

A Good Year for the Ship Builders.

The Bath ship builders have done a good year's work, launching twenty-two vessels. The gross tonnage will approximate, the largest being the steamer D. Bugbee, 2,000 tons, another of 1,800 tons, and another of 1,600 tons. Three of the vessels were steamers, three of the vessels were three masted schooners, four of the vessels were four masted schooners, one of the vessels was a bark, and the only vessel of that rig built in the county. The vessels were all built of wood.
